The very tragic events, which Uganda underwent during the past thirty years, must be seen to phase out the leaders of my generation, so that we are able to leave behind a better for future generations. Considering the very traumatic reign that Idi Amin unleashed upon Uganda, it was rather naive to believe that simply overthrowing the would reverse the conditions and mindset of Ugandans. Although the reign of Idi Amin ended in 1979, his legacy continued to dog Uganda long after that date. The challenge of building a united Uganda is very real today. The existing mindset by which the Nile River remains the crucial symbol of divide between the "North" and "South"of the country does not bode well for the prosperity of Uganda. Future leaders must embrace the Nile as a powerful developmental instrument that will secure the sovereignty of our state, which in turn must prosper as a nation where there will be no East or West, North or South!
