Grade 4-6-Prosperous villagers in an Amazon rain forest have everything they need; therefore, they become lazy and disregard their forefathers' traditions. Then a child brings an old man to the village who cuts monkeys out of leaves, monkeys that spring to life and do his bidding. The villagers request small chores at first, then bigger ones, until more and more monkeys are doing everything for them, including breathing, digesting, and complaining. At this point it is hard to distinguish the monkeys from the people or vice versa. The tale gets bogged down in places because of the characters' continuous and ever more preposterous demands. It is difficult to determine the audience for this Colombian folktale. Challenging words, e.g., antipathy, nuance, piqued, overwhelming, and phalanxes, are not even in the listening vocabulary of most young readers. Bryan's splendid cut-paper illustrations, however, help to hold readers' interest and keep the story lively. Dark silhouettes set on colored backgrounds, reminiscent of those in Marcia Brown's Shadow (Macmillan, 1986), lend a South American flavor to the text. Buy the book for the artwork alone if South American folklore is in demand. Betty Teague, Blythe Academy of Languages, Greenville, SC

Ages 5⁺-9. In this Colombian folktale, the people of an Amazon rain forest village begin neglecting their chores and moving every time their village gets too dirty. Soon even moving becomes too burdensome, so when a mysterious old man carves monkeys out of leaves and offers to bring them to life to work for the villagers, the people happily agree. Unfortunately, the perpetually dissatisfied villagers request monkeys to perform every task, even breathing and complaining, until the monkeys and humans become indistinguishable. Metaxas has an easy storytelling style, but he offers no source notes and confusingly inserts an alternative ending, from "older versions" of the story, that breaks the mood. Bryan's illustrations, black cut-paper silhouettes cast into sharply comical shapes and placed against bright backgrounds, are not only striking but also a perfect match for a story about carved monkeys. THE MONKEY PEOPLE: A COLOMBIAN FOLKTALE (RABBIT EARS WE ALL HAVE TALES) BY ERIC METAXAS PDF

Deep in the rain forests of the Amazon jungle, a village of very lazy people wishes to do nothing but lie in their hammocks and think great thoughts. One day, a mysterious man arrives who is able to create monkeys that do absolutely everything for them. Soon, the monkeys multiply and take on every human activity--including complaining. This humorous Colombian fable perfectly evokes the spirit, rhythms, and imagery of South America. Illustrated by Diana Bryan. Ages 5 and up. Part of the award-winning Rabbit Ears series, We All Have Tales. Audio and video versions using the same text and illustrations are narrated by Raul Julia with original music by Lee Ritenour. Listen with your kids - you'll love it as much as they do!

By A Customer

My kids turned me on to this book. The book itself is a lot of fun, but the tape brings it to life. The late Raul Julia creates a captivating narrative of the book, and the story is uniquely entertaining. This one is a bargain at twice the price!

good but not excellent

By Jonathan

I received this book in a slightly damaged state. The fault was the sender's: it was not packed in bubble pack of any kind, just a thin plastic envelope. In shipment, a corner of the package was bugged, and the book as a result suffered a slightly crumpling and a tear of about 1 inch in the corner impacted.
